Picture This! Drivers Forced to Read Between the Lines

Staying in one’s lane on an interstate highway isn’t usually a challenge, unless the road lines look like they were drawn by a toddler. This problem occurred on Interstate 66 in Virginia. These squiggly lines weren’t painted on the road, but instead formed when temporary striping tape on the road peeled off. The crooked traffic “lanes” were narrower than many large vehicles and at least one crash is said to have occurred.
